Dear Paul,-----

I haven't time to write, - but I feel that I must, and so I will, for a bulletin from me may mean more than one from your father, -- as he would not tell you anything that would unnecessarily worry you, and doesn't write much anyhow. So, if I tell you that we are both well, and still game, and still facing the music-- which is a devil of a note, eh ! -- you'll know that this is reliable information, I judge. Your father has been wonderfully dignified and manly and self-possessed and game all thro' this fiendish attack. And people of all ranks are recognizing that, and also that he is a victim of a gang of crooks and cut-throats, as even the representative respectables are now declaring aloud on all sides, -- to us as we go along from place to place, perfect strangers stopping D- and introducing themselves to express these very sentiments and much more in vey bitter disapproval against Fredericks and whoever higher-up may be responsible, p which surely indicates the injustice and persecution, and how it is apparent to even those that are expected to be totally blind to that side of this question--
