All sorts of rumors of a re-call of Fredericks, the rotten management of his offices here, etc, are singing in every street-car and on the pavements everywhere today. What this will lead to, or not lead to, it would be useless to speculate upon now. But you will doubtless see something later in print to show what the finals are to be. Goodness knows ! The district attorney's people boasted confidentially to even our lawyers and friends that they had "some men" in that jury-box that would never acquit,-- and as their assurances came true, it now raises questions all around, naturally, thank goodness ! Ford insinuated in his closing argument that he'd always suspected that there was something wrong with the jury that acquitted in the Lockwood-case,-- and as there were three of those jurors in the court-room at the time, the judge was promptly visited in his chamber and informed that they'd never stand for anything like that, as no jury was ever more on the square than that one was, which fact they've very much prided themselves upon ever since,-- and ,-- Ford resumed and explained that what he meant was that they were perhaps at fault in their judgement, - or perhaps the
